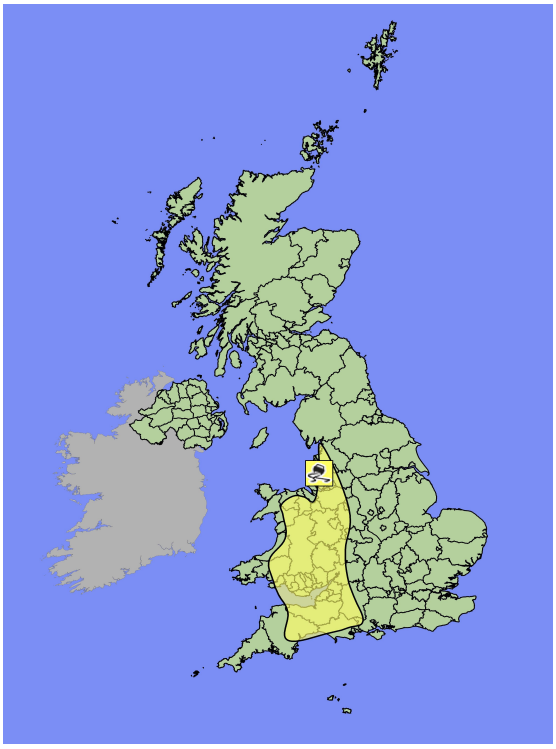
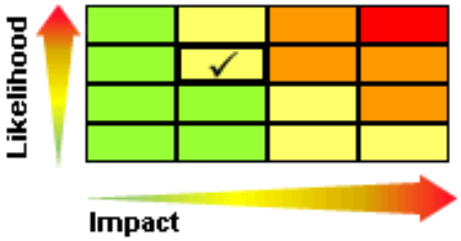
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Temperatures will fall below zero in places between two frontal systems during the early hours of Monday, leading to a risk of ice on untreated surfaces.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Mon, 14th Jan 2013 until 08:00 on Mon, 14th Jan 2013

Following the clearance of rain, sleet and snow, icy stretches are likely to develop on untreated surfaces, ahead of further rain arriving from the west early on Monday morning. High level roads are most likely to be affected by ice.

The public should be aware of the need to take extra care and time for journeys early on Monday.
